

Pack 04

Personal reset.

Get the basics running again: sleep, food, movement, people. Two rhythms, one for kids weeks and one for solo weeks.

In this pack

- 13 Weekly reset
- 14 Two-rhythm routine
- 15 Solo nights
- 16 Meal & grocery planner
- 17 Support map
- 18 Stability tracker

Two rhythms

Shared care means two different weeks: kids with you, and solo. Tools 14 to 16 plan both, so neither week has to be invented from scratch.

Start with Tool 13, the weekly reset. Every other pack points to it. In the app: Admin →

Reset the week before it starts.

Twenty minutes, once a week. Boring on the day, calming by the weekend. This is the one weekly sheet for every pack.

My reset night

For most people, the night before handover week starts.

Reset checklist

Run it every week

Kids

☐ School bags ready.

☐ Uniforms washed.

☐ Medication packed.

☐ Sports gear ready.

☐ Handover times confirmed. Week →

Money & admin

☐ Bills checked. Money →

☐ Shared expenses logged. Records →

☐ Deadlines reviewed.

☐ School comms checked.

☐ Documents filed.

Me

☐ Meals roughly planned.

☐ Groceries organised.

☐ One support contact planned.

☐ Movement planned.

What would make this week calmer?

Structure reduces decision fatigue.

Shared care means two different weeks. Write down a few repeatable anchors for each, so the days don't have to be reinvented every morning. Your routine, not theirs. Theirs is Tool 06.

01 Morning

Task	Kids with me	Solo
Wake up
Breakfast
Shower, get ready
School or work prep
Leave the house

02 Evening

Task	Kids with me	Solo
Dinner
Screens down
Kids prep
Shower, wind down
Sleep target

03 Movement

Circle one or two you'll actually do

- Walk
- Run
- Gym
- Swim
- Yoga
- Stretch
- Cycle
- Team sport

Shade the kids days, then tick the days you'll move. A walk most days beats a perfect program you skip.

04 Weekly anchors

Circle three to keep

- Morning walk
- Weekly reset
- Meal prep
- Gym or run
- Calling a friend
- Early bedtime
- Reading
- Coffee out alone
- Phone-free hour
- Other

Which routines, if you kept them, would make life feel most functional?

The quiet feels loud at first.

Nights without the kids are one of the hardest shifts after separation. The point isn't to fill the silence. It's to have a plan ready, so the evening doesn't default to scrolling or drift.

01 Default plan

My low-pressure evening looks like

Dinner

Movement

Screen limit

Wind down

Sleep target

The night before they come back

Bags, food, one thing that makes their arrival nice.

02 Solo night checklist

Aim for most of these

- ☐ Eat a proper dinner.
- ☐ Tidy one small area.
- ☐ Move your body somehow.
- ☐ No messages to your ex after [time]. Draft it, don't send it.
- ☐ Decide your drink limit before 5pm.
- ☐ Mute or unfollow what keeps pulling you back.
- ☐ Do one calming thing.
- ☐ Sleep before midnight.

What usually makes solo nights harder, and what's one small thing that helps?

If the night gets heavy.

Five meals on repeat is fine.

Stress reduces executive function: choosing what's for dinner becomes one decision too many. Write down what you can make on autopilot, for kids nights and for just you, and a short shop list. That's the whole system.

Which foods, kept in the house, make the rest of the week easier?

You don't have to carry all of it.

After separation some people step in and some step back. This page is a quiet inventory of who's actually around, what they're good for, and where the gaps are.

Who do you feel calmer around afterwards, and are you letting them help?

Notice what is slowly improving.

Progress is mostly invisible from the inside. Score each area once a week for six weeks, then read across the rows. Roughly is fine.

01

Six-week check-in

Score 1 to 5 · 1 rough, 5 steady

	Week 1 -- / --	Week 2 -- / --	Week 3 -- / --	Week 4 -- / --	Week 5 -- / --	Week 6 -- / --
Sleep
Energy
Money stress
Parenting rhythm
Home stability
Emotional capacity
Physical health
Social connection

What became slightly easier?

What would help life feel five percent steadier next week?

Closing note

You do not need to reinvent your life.
The first goal is the lights back on.

Sleep, food, one person, some movement. When those are running, the harder decisions get easier to make.
